Abstract

This study aimed to identify the level of ego identity and their relationship with situational regret among the newly-divorced women. The study sample consisted of (150) divorced women. In order to achieve the study objectives, the researcher used the scales of ego Identity, and situational regret; their validity and reliability were verified.

The results revealed that the level of, ego identity, and situational regret was medium. The results revealed that ego identity have a statistically significant impact on situational regret, where their relationship is negative, and both of them account for (10.4%) of variance in situational regret, respectively.

In the light of the results, the study recommended the necessity of educating and counseling spouses about the adverse consequences of divorce on spouses and their children as well as following the religion's instructions concerning the rights and duties of spouses and enhancing the spouses' awareness about the sacred relationship of marriage and the negative effects of divorce via the various written, auditory and visual means of media.

Key word: ego identity, situational regret, newly divorced.
